Army Biplane Swoops Down on a Surfer

HONOLULU, T. H., March 15.—(By Mail)—An army biplane out of control and manned by Lieutenant C. E. Duncan and Sergeant H. W. Russell, swooped down on Wilbur Morse, Jr., while he riding a surf board at Waikiki Beach recently like a sea gull after a choice tidbit, and, although the plane was completely wrecked, neither its crew nor the surfer was injured.

Young Morse, who is the son of Lieutenant Wilbur Morse, U. S. N. R. F., was riding his board on a big comb on the "second break" surf, when the airplane came out of the sky and headed straight for him. Lieutenant Duncan, pilot of the plane, caught a glimpse of Morse and tried to "zoom," but the machine refused to answer. As the heavy biplane, almost skimmed the surf board, Morse headed into the comb just in time to escape being crushed.

The machine crashed into the smoking breaker, smashed the propeller, crumpled its wings and turned over, while the lieutenant and sergeant leaped free with only a few scratches.
